

Design Thinking

Who:

This workshop is open to teachers and administrators from all content areas and backgrounds.

What:

Design Thinking is a process of brainstorming developed by the Stanford Design Program. According to the Stanford Design Program, "Design Thinking, the term used for the combination of the processes, skills, cognitive processes, and attitudes prevalent in design is being used to infuse innovation into businesses." This process will be beneficial wherever administrators are in the professional development planning process."

Where:

Fort Boise Training Center, Boise, Idaho

When:

February 25, 2016

Why:

Administrators will have the opportunity to walk away with a variety of ideas for creating a PD arc or adding to one that is already in place. As administrators make plans for the 2016-2017 school year, Design Thinking helps administrators to further their designs and gain feedback from colleagues.

Please register at <https://reg3admin22516.eventbrite.com>.

This workshop is sponsored by the Region 3 Coaches of the Idaho Coaching Network. Please direct questions to idahocore3@sde.idaho.gov

