It's just plain scary to drink and drive. This Halloween, remember that Buzzed Driving is Drunk Driving.

You should be terrified of what could happen if you drink and drive.

Haunted houses and spooky costumes are nothing compared to the scary consequences of drunk driving. One minute, you're celebrating with friends in costumes, and the next minute you're sitting in the back seat of a police car or riding to the hospital in an ambulance. Even if you've only had a little to drink—you have a lot to lose.

Buzzed Driving is Drunk Driving, and drunk driving is illegal. The legal and financial costs of driving while impaired can be significant. Drunk drivers often face jail time, the loss of their driver's license, higher insurance rates, and dozens of other unanticipated expenses ranging from attorney fees, court costs, car towing and repairs, and lost wages due to time off from work.

What's worse is that the consequences of drinking and driving could be taking someone else's life or your own. Every year in America, thousands of people are killed by the selfish, preventable decision to drive drunk. A third of all crash fatalities are caused due to alcohol.

The minimum legal drinking age is 21 years. Young people (ages 21-34) make up the largest group of drunk drivers in fatal crashes. Even more shocking: in 2012, almost a fifth (18%) of the drivers under age 21 in fatal crashes were drunk, which is illegal in every state.

Imagine the devastating consequences of drunk driving and the possibility of taking someone's life. It doesn't have to be a reality. Designate a sober driver. Before the Halloween parties begin, plan a way to safely get home at the end of the night.
